

The photo on the left is a picture that was taken of myself, my mom, and my sister (in that order). If you look close enough, you can see the silhouette of my dad in our sunglasses. He was the one who took the picture. On the right, is my drawing of the photo. It's actually very large in person: about 3 feet by 3 feet. It was done in tempera paint and chalk pastel. Both my sister and I have Cystic Fibrosis. This family portrait shows the love and support we all feel for each other. It's important to have people to help you through the tough times in life. My family has been there for me ever since my sister and I were diagnosed with CF, and we are so grateful for that.
